THE LAST 40 MILES

Logline

In the aftermath of a catastrophic event, an inexperienced hunter, separated from his wife and child by 900 miles of Alaskan coastline, risks life and limb to rejoin his family.

Short Synopsis

In the aftermath of a catastrophic event, Scott Brand finds himself separated from his family by 900 miles of Alaskan coastline. He embarks on a dangerous journey down the coast in hopes of finding them, but is thrown off-course by an encounter with Kyle Barton, a stranger who attempts to raid his camp. Injured and unable to trek the last forty miles alone, Scott accepts Kyle's offer to aid him in his journey... But Kyle's motives will be questioned, and the choices of both men's pasts will soon find their way to the surface.

Medium Synopsis

In the aftermath of an unknown, catastrophic event, Scott Brand finds himself separated from his family by 900 miles of Alaskan coastline. With few resources and no means of communicating with his wife or child, he has no choice but to kayak down the coast toward home.

After months of braving the harsh and unforgiving terrain, Scott finds himself on the last leg of his journey home... only to have his plans thwarted by Kyle Barton, a stranger who attempts to raid his camp.

Injured after their encounter and unable to make his way alone, Scott reluctantly accepts an offer from Kyle's to help aid him through the final forty miles home. But events soon force Scott to question Kyle's motives, and the choices of both men's pasts will find their way to the surface.

THE LAST 40 MILES

Long Synopsis

Scott Brand emerges from a summer-long hunting expedition to find that the world has gone to hell. In the aftermath of an unknown, catastrophic event, communications are down and he cannot contact his wife and child. Scott's only option is to kayak down the unfamiliar and unforgiving Southeast-Alaskan coast to the last place he knew of their whereabouts – a family cabin, some 900 miles south.

After dodging the many dangers of his trek south, Scott finds himself on the final leg of his journey. However, Scott's plan is thrown off-course by an encounter with Kyle Barton - a stranger who attempts to raid his camp. Their encounter quickly turns to a brawl, and leaves Scott injured and unable to continue kayaking down the coast. After much debate, Scott reluctantly agrees to let Kyle assist him on the last forty miles of his journey.

Through their trek down the coast, Scott is hesitant to open up to Kyle. But the two eventually bond over recent hardships. Scott struggles internally between his promise to find his family at all costs, and with risking life and limb to help his fellow man (and in turn keep his humanity). And after recent events force Scott to question whether Kyle is really who he claims to be, tension rises... and the choices of both men's pasts will find their way to the surface.

THE LAST FORTY MILES explores what it means to be human, the cost of redemption, and the consequences of trusting those who are not what they seem.

THE LAST 40 MILES

PRODUCTION SPECS

The Last 40 Miles is set to be shot on the new Canon 1DX Mark II using the DJI Ronin-M stabilizer and EasyRig Minimax. This configuration will give us the range we need to shoot smooth, immersive walk-and-talk scenes (without the need for a nearby dedicated focus-puller) as well as action shots and beautiful, cinematic landscape scenes. Audio will consist of multiple Rode mic setups, including the Rode NTG-3 and RodeLink Filmmaker Kits.

The Last 40 Miles will be edited using Adobe Creative Cloud (Adobe Premiere, After Effects), and will utilize the industry leading film color and grain software FilmConvert to showcase the beauty and color of the Alaskan landscape.
